

6516207572.txt

Seeing as I am PAYING for the ability to listen to what I want, I think that there is no reason to be limiting what XM Radio offers to its listeners. I am a traveller and need to know what the roads and conditions are going to be like as long as I am on the go. I don't have access to television and have limited internet access and so if I want to know if some storm is about to hit I will turn on the xm radio and tune in to see if I can find out any information.

There is no reason that anyone should think that readily available information about the weather and traffic shouldn't be offered in the XM Radio services. Why does this information have to be bought? It all started by someone looking out a window, and if need be we can go right back to that.